Impressive Easter Concert Given by Musical Society

The Elastertide concert of the Musica Art Society, the second and last of its season, took place yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The programme swent the field of part music from the most sacred canticles of the Crucifixion to the jellification of the cowboy and from the school of Palestrina to the untutored chant of the American Indian. It was a generous and interesting programme and the audience appeared to enjoy every moment of it, although the first demand for a rapetition. though the first demand for a repetition | manager. came with the delivery of the cowpuncher's praise of his under jaw.

Perhaps the most intressive feature ind petit point. The contrast in of the concert was a chorus from the Connecticut and carelidate for Governor late Horatio Parker's "St. Christopher"
This number, "Now Sinks the Sun," is one of the most notable and profoundly in Webster, Mass., fifty-eight years ago musical pleces of native composition, and it was placed on the programme to show respect to the memory of the School in 1888 and had held numbrous State and town offices.
